Sandy Huffaker for The New York Times

Up, Stretch . . . and Breathe!

Urban Bush Women, a performance group that uses dance to express the spiritual traditions of African-Americans, finished a 10-day residency last week at the University of California, San Diego. In addition to performing, they taught dance classes and conducted workshops. Here Jawole Willa Jo Zollar, the artistic director, taught a technique class to university students. The group is scheduled to perform in Ohio, Indiana, Nebraska and New York City, where it will appear at the Joyce Theater from May 8 to 13.
